

LIVE OUTSIDE

For more than 40 years, Edgewood Log Homes has been designing and building luxury custom log homes for a discriminating clientele. Read on to learn why their homes are nothing short of exceptional.

Edgewood caters to a unique demographic. What would you say is your 'target audience'?

Many Edgewood clients have beautiful log and timber homes in remote locations. Access may be difficult, off-grid amenities are often necessary and short building seasons dictate much of the schedule. Some home builds are extremely challenging. Knowing how to integrate off-grid components while having the architect, builder and log and timber manufacturer in one facility allows clients the flexibility they need to create their sanctuary home in truly spectacular locations.

Tell us about the range of home designs you offer.

Clients are seeking independence from the mainstream, while looking for a higher level of self-reliance and security. The Sanctuary Line by Edgewood offers five pre-designed independent living options for interested clients. These designs often serve as the base for clients to expand on and make changes as desired. Having a solid starting point can speed up the architectural process to help clients build more quickly.

What sets the Edgewood client experience apart from the competition?

The backbone of a superior client experience with Edgewood is two things; design focus and the freedom of craft. Clients choose Edgewood because of the sophisticated level of skill in the architecture of each home. Knowing how each log or timber interacts with other materials in the design is extremely valuable early in the process and saves time in adjustments and changes later.

Is there a recent project that you're really excited about?

This year we break ground on a custom designed, remote home in Colorado. The clients have great vision, our architectural team works brilliantly with the interiors team in Denver and the contractor has been on the job since day one. The most important aspect of any project is the team in place to execute it, and with this client we couldn't ask for a better fit.
